Solari Food Series – Pioneering Urban Farms with Will Allen - August 25th

To

“A great man is a torch in the darkness, a beacon in superstition’s night, an inspiration and a prophecy.” ~ Robert Green Ingersoll

This week Harry Blazer returns with his interview of Will Allen, CEO of Growing Power, in Milwaukee.

When you listen to Will Allen, you will hear a man modest in his presentation. But make no mistake — what he is attempting is essential – to make entrepreneurial urban farming work.

Will grew up on a farm, had an early successful career in basketball and then a second career in marketing for Proctor & Gamble. After retiring from the corporate world, he purchased a nursery and a farm in the Milwaukee area and proceeded to build an organization that grows food and grows farmers. Here is how Henry Ford Magazine described his operation in 2013:

“Today, Allen is the quintessential icon of the urban farming movement — a master farmer with more than 50 years of growing under his belt. His innovative techniques in seeding, vermicomposting and aquaponics have built the multimillion-dollar operation Growing Power from a two-acre farm in Milwaukee. Here, Allen still personally nurtures more than 20,000 plants and veggies, creates compost from more than 180,000 pounds of waste per week, raises thousands of fish of varying types and tends to an ever-expanding flock of chickens, goats, rabbits and more. Along with selling what he harvests to neighboring communities in need, he is equally committed to sharing what he knows. He is training urban youth in his farming techniques so they, too, can grow their own good food, wipe out inner-city food deserts and start building healthy, sustainable food systems for future generations. Already, these well-trained prodigies are running more than a dozen additional Growing Power farms in Illinois and Wisconsin as well as a dozen more regional training centers across the U.S.”

Harry thought this interview was so important that he flew to Milwaukee to talk to Will in person. I hope it inspires you to support Will and the entrepreneurs around you who are rebuilding your local fresh food system.

Introduction to Pistis Sophia

“And Jesus answered Mary, saying ‘Ask what you wish, and I will reveal it to you openly and without analogy...” ~ Pistis Sophia

By Catherine Austin Fitts

In July, I visited with Ulrike Granögger in Lake Constance, Germany. I asked Ulrike to give an introduction to the Gnostic text Pistis Sophia to Alastair and Wendy Thompson who were visiting from Brittany for the day. We recorded the discussion and are posting in response to the question, “What is the Pistis Sophia and why is it of such interest?”

Highlights from Last Week - Human Communications Between Reality and Official Reality with Jon Rappoport

Jon Rappoport joins me this week to explore a phenomenon we are all grappling with – communicating with people who believe in realities that diverge from our own.

Everywhere we turn there is an “official narrative” or “official reality.” That “reality” often diverges painfully from the reality that we deal with day to day.

For those who reject the official narrative, it is easy to wander into a maze of other realities, of which many are equally divergent from our own and more misleading than the official reality.

Spice up the mix with professional disinformation, “divide and conquer” media, and entrainment and subliminal programming and other mind control techniques, and then our human communication can quickly become a puzzle palace that challenges the best of us.

This is a topic that fascinates me – however, I find it difficult to generalize. Communications in passing conversation are quite different from conversations involving health or financial decisions involving legal and financial risk. Managing communications about divergent realities at a cocktail party is very different from managing them with your spouse. Given the complexity of our society, the fact patterns expand quickly.

If there is one thing driving productivity lower in our society, it is the complexity, frustration, and loneliness that can arise with communications in this Orwellian soup. It is critical that we each develop strategies for navigating the challenges of communicating effectively with family, friends, and colleagues. It is one thing to be “in the know.” It is another thing to communicate effectively with those who are not and don’t want to be “in the know.”

For many years, I have turned to Jon Rappoport’s writings, audios, and consultations for help to understand these issues and to remain coherent in the midst of the “psychic storm.” Jon consistently inspires me to create my own reality, rather than falling into the pea soup of the official narrative designed to harvest us all. We close with a review of the great resources he offers at No More Fake News to help you do the same.
