The 2nd Quarter Wrap Up: Enforce the Constitution with Congresswoman Cynthia McKinney July 6, 2017

Austin Fitts: It's my pleasure to welcome to The Solari Report a woman who needs no introduction, and that is Congresswoman Cynthia McKinney, who served from the 11th and 4th Congressional Districts in the Atlanta region for 12 years, challenging all the powers that be. If anybody has tried to enforce the Constitution, it's Congresswoman McKinney.

She is now a professor of political science in Bangladesh, Asia. I have been with her for the last week, and have to tell you that she is as good a hostess as she was a Congresswoman.

Cynthia McKinney: Oh, that's wonderful news. My mother will be pleased.

C. Austin Fitts: Your mother would be impressed. My mother would be very impressed.

Anyway, Southern hospitality lives and reigns in Bangladesh.

Along with teaching political science – both at the graduate and undergraduate level – she teaches organizational change and leadership and entrepreneurship.

She has a group of talented, visionary, entrepreneurial students. They are exciting to be around, and they are excited to be around her and learning from her.

It has really been inspiring to be here. You feel as though you're actually living in solutions when you're here. I'll tell you, Cynthia, the society that will work is a society where the young people are excited about creating and building the future you just feel that here.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes, and it is intergenerational as well. Those students pulled me into whatever it is that they're doing, even when I want to sleep!

C. Austin Fitts: They have invited us into their homes for the holiday. We're in the midst of a great holiday here in Dhaka, which is the capital of Bangladesh, and you see how much these parents have invested in these children and how they keep investing.

Cynthia McKinney: That's right.

C. Austin Fitts: They are building their children who are building the future.

Cynthia McKinney: The children honor that investment of their parents.

C. Austin Fitts: Right. It's wonderful to see that, and it's rare that you see and feel the same kind of intergenerational love and support.

Cynthia McKinney: The thing that is extremely amazing to me is that I have about 15 young people between the ages of 20 and 25, and we have been all over this country. We have been on eight to ten excursions – long outings.

C. Austin Fitts: Right. You've been to Nepal.

Cynthia McKinney: We've been to all areas inside Bangladesh – Sundarbans, Cox's Bazar. Sundarbans is a World Heritage site that has the world's largest mangrove forest. Cox's Bazar is the world's longest 'sea' beach, and I guess it's the world's longest beach.

We have been to the mountains, to the valleys, to the deltas. We have been there, and the remarkable impression is : No drugs, no cigarette smoking, no alcohol, and nothing except good, clean fun.

C. Austin Fitts: These kids have more fun and they're having very great fun.

Cynthia McKinney: They're having great fun, but it's not augmented or whatever.

C. Austin Fitts: It's clean fun and they don't need to come clean because they've always been clean.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes.

C. Austin Fitts: And they've always been clean and we need to come clean.

Cynthia McKinney: You are right, America does.

C. Austin Fitts: It's interesting because I started this trip in Australia, and there, wherever I went, the young people were very excited about the future. They were worried about the different things, but they are building the future.

Hong Kong is a city that has always reinvented itself, but this time the young people were not excited about being part of that reinvention. The question is: What is going to happen?

Here in Dhaka, the kids are wildly excited about the opportunity of their future.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes.

C. Austin Fitts: The reality is that freedom and entrepreneurial opportunity attract.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes.

C. Austin Fitts: When you get 7 billion people excited about their freedom and their entrepreneurial opportunity, things start to percolate.

Cynthia McKinney: This is very interesting, though, because the freedom and the entrepreneurial spirit are almost separated from the political system. This is something that resides within the people, which is why your 'come clean' is so important. It starts in the heart.

C. Austin Fitts: I really believe that people have the power if they will embrace that.

Before we go on and talk about the Constitution, I want to bring up the fact that I watched you over your career challenge the official reality on 9/11 and challenge them on the missing money. In fact, no one would listen to me about the missing money until you confirmed that what I was saying was correct.

You challenged them on the sex slave trafficking by government contractors and under the auspice of the Federal government. You have challenged them again and again on all of this, and you paid the ultimate price. I was amazed that you were re-elected considering the forces that were ready to throw you out of Congress.

I will say this because you wouldn't say it: You won the Senate primary, and then they rigged it and played a game on you. So you have gone up against the machine, and you have one of the best track records about winning the machine. They had to spend a lot of time and money getting rid of you.

In my opinion, it is very important that people not say, "Well why is no one doing something?"

Your career is proof that very talented, capable, successful people have been doing plenty all along.

Cynthia McKinney: That's right. I appreciate you reminding your audience about that because I understand so much. I raise my hand (in cyberspace) and say, "I was trying to do something about it."

At the time, the deep state and all of its factions coalesced and came together, utilizing every resource that they had at their fingertips – which is a great deal. People believed them at that time but it is a different time now.

C. Austin Fitts: The fake news worked.

Cynthia McKinney: That's right.

C. Austin Fitts: One of our great opportunities now is that the fake news is not working; it's breaking down. We will talk about this more later, but there is a large number of people in Congress, in the Senate, and government officials who have been harmed by the deep state and the fake news cycle. Now there is a huge opportunity, if we can break the fake news cycle, to start protecting the leadership that really is trying to enforce the Constitutional law.

Cynthia McKinney: There are a few members of Congress who have come and gone – like me – who campaigned against the deep state, against the fake news, and had to succumb to it. But there is one member of Congress, in particular, who I always give a shout-out to, and it's a Republican, Walter Jones from North Carolina.

Initially he is the guy who conceived 'Freedom fries' instead of calling them French fries because the French refused to go to war with the US against Iraq at the time. He was a true believer in the lies and the propaganda. But over the course of many people challenging, he heard them and decided that he had been lied to.

I personally saw him carry his Congressional letterhead everywhere he went. The purpose was that he was always writing ‘I’m sorry’ notes to all of the families of the soldiers who died in Iraq. That man is someone who I look up to, and I’m just happy that he is still in the Congress. He is that beacon out there, and is the one – I believe – who we can count on to champion what we’re talking about in terms of the Constitution.

C. Austin Fitts: One of the most important things that we can do to enforce the Constitution is to enforce the leadership that is willing to enforce the Constitution. So the day that Walter Jones’ starts getting more support from people than Chuck Schumer or John McCain – and we’ll discuss John McCain later.

Cynthia McKinney: That’s right.

C. Austin Fitts: So let’s turn to the Constitution. One thing that I’ve begun to appreciate as a result of starting this conversation about how we enforce the Constitution is that I’m learning how few people really understand how powerful the Constitution has been, as both a spiritual and a legal covenant, and how important it is to protecting us.

In other words, we take it for granted. We don’t understand what is going to happen if it goes away. So what I would really appreciate is if you could say a few words about why you believe in the Constitution – having been a Congresswoman and having dealt with many different political and legal issues in the United States and globally through the United States.

What does the Constitution mean to you, and why do you think it's important?

Cynthia McKinney: I'll start by saying that it is the governing structure of our state. It provides the state with legitimacy when the rules and regulations and values that are professed in the Constitution are abided by, not only by the citizens, but also by those who are elected in the republic to represent the citizens.

The only issue is, who gets defined as a 'citizen'. So you can have a wonderful document, but if it's not implemented correctly, or if imperfect people implement it, then the appearance is that you have an imperfect document.

Maybe it's not imperfect; it's just that we haven't reached the ideal to which those who wrote the Constitution aspired. So that is what I would say.

The Constitution, also – as any constitution does – expresses our values. What is it that we stand for as citizens of the United States? If we say one thing and do another, then of course the state loses its legitimacy. If the citizens allow the state to lose its legitimacy, then one of the questions that I've been grappling with is: To what extent are we also complicit in the transgressions of the state?

So if we don't provide, as Clausewitz would say, the friction, and if we're not 'frictioning' against the ideals and the values that are expressed in the Constitution, then we are part of the problem.

C. Austin Fitts: I would say it this way: We have a covenant. We have a group agreement, and that group agreement at a spiritual and cultural level is unbelievably powerful. So around 1996, you would hear many Americans say spontaneously, “Hey, it’s a free country.”

In other words, “I don’t like you. You don’t like me. But I honor your right to be free, to have a right to have opportunity, to have a right to own property. So I respect free speech for you to say whatever you want.”

That was a covenant where Americans – not matter what their background was – afforded each other a kind of respect.

Cynthia McKinney: We had the Bill of Rights. We could say, “It’s my right,” and the others would say, “Yeah, it’s a right.”

During the Civil Rights movement, you would have black attorneys representing the Klan in free speech cases because, at the end of the day, the ability of the Klan to articulate their vision must remain intact so that the rest of us – including blacks – can articulate our vision.

There have been justifications for the erosions that have taken place of our rights in the Bill of Rights to the extent that we had a President who said, “What’s the Constitution? It’s only a piece of paper.”

C. Austin Fitts: In my opinion, it’s something very powerful. What you and I have seen, and many people who I talk to about this have seen, is the government break the law repeatedly for many decades now – if not from the very beginning. They say, “We’re not following it anyway. Who cares?”

The reality is that if you think these people are breaking the Constitution now, wait until you see what they can do if they tear it up.

We did a great Solari Report with Constitutional scholar Edwin Vieira about why you shouldn't have a Constitutional Convention. If you do, they can tear it up. And if you think they're bad now, wait until you see what they can do once they tear it up.

What I try to impress on people is having the formal law be what it is now. That still gives us tremendous spiritual and cultural covenant, but it also makes it much harder and much more expensive to break it. Given how much they're breaking it now, if you tear it up, we're talking about a world where there are no property rights, where there are no human rights. We're talking about an exceptionally totalitarian society, and I would argue slavery as well.

I always try to get my subscribers to watch the Aaron Russo video where he talks about how the Rockefellers want everybody microchipped. They're going to do things like that.

Cynthia McKinney: They've already started doing things like that.

C. Austin Fitts: Exactly!

Cynthia McKinney: I was in the Congress when they passed the legislation to require all farm animals to be chipped. That was the beginning and I clearly understood where that was headed.

The divergence of the practice from the ideal is what caused me to take stock of myself. First of all, it made me take stock of our political system, and then I took stock of myself.

At some point, if the people of the United States don't engage when their ideals and the legitimacy of the state is being abridged, then the blowback from those actions and behaviors comes back to the people of the US. Is that right or is that not right?

You talk about the targeting of civilians. This is something that I'm grappling with right now. When do we stop being civilians?

C. Austin Fitts: Under the Constitution, everything that the United States does, we are responsible. Our property is responsible for supporting the debt because our property and we are collateral.

If the state goes down or the state loses legitimacy and there are financial or legal ramifications to us, we are on the hook.

Cynthia McKinney: In 2007 I declared my independence from the national leadership that was trying to make me complicit in the war crimes and torture crimes against humanity and all of that. I said, "I'm out."

What I'm still grappling with is: How do I make that into an action item? How do I operationalize being out in every sense of the word? Probably at this point, the most important sense – which is the most difficult sense – is that I'm out intellectually in my heart and my spirit and my soul, but I still have the financial entanglement.

C. Austin Fitts: We're going to talk about 'how', and that is the question we all have: How? For you to make enormous progress on the 'how' you need other people to be part of that.

One thing to do is sit down and read it. Read the Declaration of Independence, read the Bill of Rights, and read the Constitution. There are two things that I want to consider because they'll come up in this discussion. One is the Appropriations Clause, "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time."

That means that you can't spend money that Congress hasn't appropriated, and you have to disclose. We know that they are in complete and utter violation of that. The second is the War Powers Clause, and that is from Article 1, "The Congress shall have the power to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water."

So that means no wars unless Congress approves. What you told me, which I didn't realize, is that there is case law that says if Congress appropriates, that is deemed to be approval of the war powers.

Cynthia McKinney: That's right. That has been driven home time and time again through the courageous actions of Dennis Kucinich when he was in the Congress.

C. Austin Fitts: Right, an amazing man.

Cynthia McKinney: When he went to court, I think against Iraq, and I know that he did it against Libya.

The courts reaffirmed, when Congress appropriates the funds for the war, that can be construed as Congress' authorization of a war.

C. Austin Fitts: What that means is, if we have set up a structure between Congress and Treasury, that the Department of Defense can spend infinite amounts – because we know $11 trillion is missing. So if they appropriate, the war is approved. If they don't appropriate, they just spend the money and do it anyway.

Cynthia McKinney: And they don't disclose.

C. Austin Fitts: Right.

Cynthia McKinney: It's amazing to me. It's outrageous that you don't have 535 members of Congress jumping up and down because the Pentagon won't reveal to whom it gave money in these 'untrackable' transactions. We know that as a transaction somebody received something.

C. Austin Fitts: It is trackable. All the wires batch and go through the New York Fed and it's trackable and there is a digital record.

Cynthia McKinney: So it is trackable, and it's not disclosed. So this is purposeful behavior to hide certain activities from the people of the US, in addition to the secret budget. For example the secret intelligence budget that is classified, why should it be classified? The people of the US deserve to know what the government is doing.

C. Austin Fitts: You have a machinery where a group of people in the deep state can basically print or borrow an infinite amount of money and spend it on a nondisclosed basis completely outside of the Constitution, and this allows them – literally – to run an entire planet by force.

Cynthia McKinney: Absolutely, and to do anything else with the money. That is how you get whole pallets of US dollars sent to Iraq.

Cynthia McKinney: It's ridiculous. It's outrageous, and I've been outraged for a very long time.

C. Austin Fitts: What we're saying is that the Appropriations Clause and the War Powers Clause, in combination, are not being enforced. Until and unless they are enforced, you are seeing machinery that is going to destroy the planet.

Cynthia McKinney: Absolutely. I agree with you.

C. Austin Fitts: Part of our challenge is to change that, it's going to take all of us – not just in the United States, but globally.

Cynthia McKinney: The people of the United States have a huge responsibility to hold their government accountable because all roads lead to Washington, DC. If Washington, DC is messed up, then the rest of the world is messed up.

C. Austin Fitts: The bank depository and all of the financial servicing and other work is done through the New York Fed member banks for the US government. So the US government doesn't have its own bank accounts; it banks with all the New York Fed member banks and the Exchange Stabilization Fund. The New York Fed member banks' agent runs its slush fund, and all of its information systems, unfortunately, is now run by large defense contractors with those banks.

It doesn't have information or financial sovereignty, and part of enforcing the Constitution is getting that back.

Cynthia McKinney: It absolutely doesn't have information sovereignty. Instead, what you have, is the Fed claiming its sovereignty, distinct and separate from the United States government.

C. Austin Fitts: I would say that we have a few structural problems.

Why is this important to you? What happens if we don't enforce the Constitution but, in fact, change it? I want to talk numbers now. Since 1998, $40 trillion has disappeared in bailouts and missing money, and even more in quantitative easing. I could estimate it up to $100 trillion.

Now they have $40 trillion, but that is not on the balance sheet. However, if you look at the law, your property and my property and our retirement savings is on the balance sheet. So one thing that the Constitutional Convention push is trying to do is push a balanced budget amendment.

Well, if we're going to balance the budget with our retirement savings and property on budget, but the $40 trillion that they just stole off budget, guess what is going to happen?

Cynthia McKinney: Right, and the people pay the ultimate price, as always.

Part of what we have to demand is that we want that money back. We want that money back for our infrastructure, for our children, for education, for everything that has gone undone and stolen.

C. Austin Fitts: Let me make this point: People always say, "It's gone; we can't get it back." That is not true. That money went someplace, and now there are assets that exist. The ownership interest in those assets should be back on the table.

Cynthia McKinney: Well, they should be back on the table. This is partially what got me into trouble. Then I said, "Let me start calling names."

It's very important for us to call names, because if you make it a charge or an attack and it's not a direct hit, it goes over people's heads. You've been engaged in this conversation for 30 years.

C. Austin Fitts: Right.

Cynthia McKinney: I've only started the conversation last year. Maybe some people started it in September 2011. So there is an entire body of knowledge out there that I don't have.

You don't have the luxury of trying to educate me by going over my head. If you really want me to get it, you need to hit directly. That's why calling names becomes important.

C. Austin Fitts: That brings us to our next topic: Slug management.

Cynthia McKinney: I pour salt on mine!

C. Austin Fitts: One of my simple constructs is that in any community and any country and any organization and any business, 10% of the people are what I would call 'net energy plus' – they give more than they take. Those are your entrepreneurs and they are a net energy plus.

Then there are 80% who are followers. They just follow around whoever is in charge. They're busy; they're having kids; and they're doing whatever. Some of us cycle between being followers and net energy plus.

Then you have a group that I call the 'net energy minus', and my nickname for them is the slugs. The slugs always drain. Some of the slugs are Scorpions, which means that they enjoy draining. They enjoy busting things. They enjoy breaking things and making them not work. The slugs will always be with us.

I grew up in a neighborhood in West Philadelphia that was a multiracial, multicultural, multi-religious area, but all the different people – the net energy plus people – could figure out each other. They would organize to do slug management very quietly because they could cut off the slugs' money. Then when government money and the drugs came in, the net energy plus people lost the ability to cut off the slugs' money. The rich and powerful slugs figured out how to use the local slugs.

So part of our problem is slug management. Basically what we've done is allowed networks of people to get the bit in their teeth, and are running a system where they're centralizing political and economic power, and it's shrinking the total pie. But they don't care because they're slugs.

Cynthia McKinney: They don't care at all. It's interesting that we are having this discussion because I introduced a new word to my political science students, and that word is 'kakistocracy'. That is leadership governance by the least qualified, most corrupt, most vile kinds of personalities. They are the ones who are able to claw their way to the top.

This phenomenon of 'kakistocracy' then led me to consider the entire scenario in the republic, and say "I am a sovereign individual, and I take my sovereignty and I give it to someone else, and then I beg them, please do this for me. Please do that for me."

Maybe built into that particular power configuration is this inability to control the slugs.

C. Austin Fitts: Let's talk about a very important thing. You said that we have to name names. So let's talk about who the slugs are. There are different constructs.

You have this construct of the pilgrims and the Ziocons, which I think is very useful and very interesting. You're basically targeting two power groups. The Ziocons are a mixture of Zionists and neocons, and the pilgrims are like the old line WASPs.

We've seen power bounce around and back and forth between these two groups. There is no doubt about it. Part of what we're watching is an integrated merger of the pilgrims and the Ziocons (I call them the Neocons). We're looking at this merger, and at the root of it is, fundamentally, an organized crime model. I would say that the reason I use the term 'Scorpion' is because, in my opinion, they are demonic.

I don't know if you've ever seen the movie Eyes Wide Shut, but these are people who do perverted things. So we're talking about a very perverted subject here.

Maybe you could say a few words about the Ziocons and the pilgrims and what you saw in Congress for 12 years.

Cynthia McKinney: I came up with the Pilgrims and the Ziocons because I was trying to understand what I was witnessing and what I was experiencing when I was in Congress. There was that level of contention that was happening for who was actually going to control the reigns of the state and all of the powers of the governing apparatus of the United States of America.

What I believe is that there was a point at which the pilgrims and the Ziocons shared a mission, according to Dr. Peter Turchin and his idea of cliodynamics where he tries to mathematize history. He says that at one point you have the united deep state. Then the apparatus of the state is incapable of satisfying in periods of boon all of the power demands of every individual who is in the deep state. That is when you see factionalization taking place. I believe that this is where we are now.

C. Austin Fitts: When I say that the debt growth model is over, I'm saying that the spigot of infinite free money is over, and now it's the Midianite thing. Fighting is beginning because there is not enough juice to satisfy all the criminals.

Cynthia McKinney: That's right.

C. Austin Fitts: I have a very famous story where I was in a meeting with Jack Kemp, and he said, "The law? I don't have to obey the law. I report to something higher."

What he was implying is, if you watched the movie Eyes Wide Shut, there is a group of secret societies and they are 'above the law'.

Cynthia McKinney: Why isn't Hillary Clinton before the ICC? Why isn't she even before the New York courts? This is a woman who is a serial criminal, and yet, crime that pays is crime that stays.

C. Austin Fitts: Let's give examples of some of the people. Some of the neocons are nearly all named, but if you examine the Congress, the Ziocons are in full blossom.

I'm thinking of Lindsay Graham; I'm thinking of John McCain; I'm thinking of Chuck Schumer.

One thing I'll give Chuck Schumer credit for is that he explains the issue. He was on TV and essentially said that the President can't buck the intelligence agencies because "they'll get you".

Cynthia McKinney: That's right. They'll think of six ways to Sunday to get you.

C. Austin Fitts: What Chuck Schumer was saying was that we're not obeying the Constitution because, if you look at the powers and authorities of the President, he doesn't have any of that; he does what he is told by the intelligence agencies, which is – in fact – how it's been working since they shot John F. Kennedy in broad daylight.

I have a theory, and when I started moving up the system, the pilgrims were in control, but they used the Ziocons to do their dirty tricks. If they wanted wholesale criminality to pull a lot of capital, they would use the Ziocons to do it.

Cynthia McKinney: That was their slug management, and then something happened.

C. Austin Fitts: Right. You'll see throughout history that whenever you depend on somebody to operationalize it, at some point they lever up their power.

So we go through the bailouts, and suddenly $27 trillion gets stolen. Suddenly the Ziocons are no longer doing the dirty tricks; they're at the table.

Cynthia McKinney: That's right.

C. Austin Fitts: Part of it is that in 1995 it was made very clear to me that the pilgrims decided that they were giving up on the country and were pulling all their money out. That was part of the financial coup d'état in getting all the money out. The question, of course, is: Where are you going to go?

The other thing I wanted to do was talk about the role of Israel. I think in the 1990's, one of the heads of the FBI said that Israel was the greatest threat to national security of this country. What we're watching within the Ziocons is a very strong relationship between the Ziocons and Israel. Israel's governmental capacity – the Masad and the defense industry and everything.

We are watching an explosion of government officials, politicians, and people in the military who have dual citizenships.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes, and it's a problem. Under Putin's leadership, the Duma passed a rule saying that no Duma member could have dual citizenship, so they're at least loyal to Russia if they're going to 'serve' Russia.

The situation is not the same in the US. Therefore, we can have someone like Rahm Emanuel, who served with me and then organized to make sure that I was kicked out of the Congress while he was in charge of the deep state, who also served in the Israeli defense forces but not in the US military.

C. Austin Fitts: The one person I'm thinking of is Dov Zakheim. He was instrumental in the undocumented adjustments at the DOD and somewhat papered it over and he had dual citizenship.

Here is why this is all important: What you're talking about is, with both the pilgrims and the Ziocons, you're getting a relatively small group of people together, and through the Federal credit mechanism and the subversion of the war clause, giving them the machinery that provides them the ability to institute violence under the rule of law globally on a nontransparent basis.

Cynthia McKinney: Right, but I say that the Ziocons don't care about the survival of the US. What other reason would they push war against Russia? Maybe Russia, China, and Iran have blood together, and the United States can't win that war; they shouldn't even fight it.

C. Austin Fitts: But if the US and Russia destroy each other, then they are ascendant – be it from Israel or wherever. So they have a place in mind, but they all have second passports.

Cynthia McKinney: In the 1990's or so, I remember observing what happened with the fall of the Soviet Union. So from the Yeltsin years to the Gorbachev years I observed what happened there.

Then it went to Argentina. What's to say that it's not going to happen in the United States? That is what I was saying a long time ago, and now it's here.

C. Austin Fitts: What I believe the Ziocons want is to parcel the United States into five or six countries.

Cynthia McKinney: They balkanize everything else. They've successfully Balkanized Sudan. I witnessed two Sudanese women literally crying because, one was from the north and one was from the south, and they are supposed to be enemies now. They are supposed to hate each other, and their country has been broken. That is the Ziocons. If they would do it over there, why wouldn't they do it over here?

C. Austin Fitts: Right. You circulate population and balkanize political states so no one has any power.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes. That is exactly right.

C. Austin Fitts: I think it's hard for people to understand just how psychopathic they are.

Cynthia McKinney: They don't care! I've been with the Kurds and I've been with Kurdish leaders, so I understand support and their cry for freedom and dignity and being able to speak their language, which they couldn't even do in the Turkish part of the Kurd population as per the map creating the new Kurdistan.

There is a difference between a legitimate aspiration for freedom and someone else coming in and using that legitimate aspiration for freedom for their own goals, which are demonic – as you say.

C. Austin Fitts: It's peculiar because James Howard Kunstler recently wrote a long article, and must have used the word 'demonic' 20 times. This is a very secular guy but I've been using 'demonic' for 20 years and it's hard for most people to relate.

When you see the scorpion-like behavior, that's when you realize that these people get power from destroying everything.

Cynthia McKinney: Let me tell you what I did. I read something – which I can't remember where I read it – and I went back and watched Eyes Wide Shut (or tried to watch it) and then look what happened to Scalia.

C. Austin Fitts: Scalia was assassinated.

Cynthia McKinney: Then I studied the way those men dressed. They were in a part of society where they dressed very strangely and I read that there was something about human skin.

You can buy shoes and pocketbooks made out of human skin. I'm thinking, "What the heck is this?"

So your audience can search about human skin shoes, and you'll be able to find it and say, "Oh my goodness! This is beyond what I could even conceive".

C. Austin Fitts: If you watched some of the information about Pizzagate that is well documented, you can see how demonic the culture is.

I saw it because I worked for Jack Kemp and there were neocons in that group and saw how they operate. They believe that if you just destroy all civil, legal, and cultural infrastructure, ‘things will come back together’ and work, which they won’t.

Cynthia McKinney: That is a part of cliodynamics. It’s the science of destruction and reconstruction. Basically you destroy a country – as the United States military is used to do – and then you can buy a generation or so of hegemony.

C. Austin Fitts: Here is where our power can come from. First and foremost the spiritual power and the spiritual covenant which the Chinese call the ‘Mandate of Heaven’. But the reality is that if you see who has power on this planet, a portion of the power comes from those who can produce the high margin, which is organized crime. The other is those who can produce financial liquidity, and financial liquidity provides significantly more increase than organized crime.

The reality is that the minute the global population realizes that this is organized crime, the financial liquidity goes away. That is what has been happening.

The central banks have been trying to keep it going, but the more they pump, the less the increase out of that pump. It’s dying, and the reason it’s dying is because deep down, nobody trusts the system and they are pulling back.

You see all these different tricks to try to get people back in with cryptocurrencies and all these different things, but the reality is that the global world is looking at it and saying, “These people are psychopaths. They are Scorpions. We want to pull back.”

That is both a danger and an opportunity because the society that can produce the most increase and preserve that kind of liquidity is the one that can perform. That’s the problem. Ultimately these people depend on a harvesting of the general population the minute the general population withdraws.

In my opinion, this idea of coming clean and withdrawing is so important.

Cynthia McKinney: We all need to take poison pills.

C. Austin Fitts: We all need to detox.

Cynthia McKinney: We’re detoxing, but at the same time, when they try to harvest us, it is so unpalatable that they spit us out.

C. Austin Fitts: I absolutely agree. I have a theory that every time they tell someone to target people like you and me, all the folks in the trenches are saying, “No, not them. Never again. They’re too painful.”

I want to discuss control files because I believe control files are very, very important to how they’ve gotten as far as they have. You watch someone like Chuck Schumer and someone like John McCain. Those people have major control files.

I saw the hearing with Bernie Sanders recently where he was grilling Vought for the appointment for OMB. I said, “Oh, his job is to want to run a hit job on Vought because the Ziocons want that position for themselves.”

Talk a little about control files, if you will.

Cynthia McKinney: I never really thought about it in those terms; I only watched the events. After what happened to some of the members of Congress with Jack Abramoff, I went back and looked at Abscam. I wanted to understand who was coordinating this. I don’t think that it is a coincidence that from Abscam to Abramoff to Jeffrey Epstein that you have Ziocons at the root of these problems.

You’re right. There are only 535 seats in Congress, so you want to control all 535 of them.

C. Austin Fitts: You want to get obscene pictures on every one of them so that you can tell them what to do. I have to tell you that if you look at the control file system, it’s very economic because I can get you to steal $40 trillion for me, and I don’t have to pay you a big bonus.

Cynthia McKinney: That’s right. There are some members of Congress who come close to understanding the way that the system is rigged. It was wonderful when Trump was able to get away with saying, “The system is rigged.” Everybody knows by now – we all know – that the system is rigged.

There are certain members of Congress who came up against and tried to expose, and they got churned. You can say that I got churned, but I didn't end up in prison.

Cynthia McKinney: That's right.

C. Austin Fitts: Part of the reason this got turbocharged in the 1990's was the Telecommunications Act. It basically allowed a very economic way of using government money to collect all phone and other digital communications, so they could build control files on people at very economic costs. They had no secrets. They had all the secrets in the world, but they had no secrets.

Once you approve bulk collection, you can go back. They have 100% of all of our conversations and emails since 1996.

Cynthia McKinney: The thing that is so inexplicable is that the billing system for every phone call that is made in the US is actually compiled or organized in Israel. It's unbelievable to me. But I remember reading Victor Ostrovsky who said in By way of Deception – and he has another book, The Other Side of Deception – that the Masad found that operating through corporations was the most useful way because corporations could go into places that intelligence could not go.

I remember who received the contract to provide telecommunication service to every member of Congress that was up for grabs. Israel got the contract.

C. Austin Fitts: When you're doing that, you're actually taking the control file system and turning it over to Israel.

Cynthia McKinney: Right. You're turning it over to people who know how to use it and who have a clear vision and mission. They have clearly articulated goals to each other – not to us. So we judge them by what they do, and those of us who have been looking at this for a long – just like you've been looking at it for a long time – can see what they're doing.

C. Austin Fitts: Britain is a tiny country that ruled the world. Israel is a tiny country that could conceivably run the world if the United States and Russia killed each other.

Cynthia McKinney: Of course they could.

C. Austin Fitts: I would like to point out that when we raped Russia, the entire Russian mafia acquired Israeli passports. So we're talking about a very unique partnership there.

If you look at the fundamental governance issues, control files, or what Chuck Schumer is saying about the intelligence agency and their ability, you're talking about an invisible governance structure and the dual passport system. You're watching the creation of multiple invisible control structures that are basically causing the struggle that we're seeing unfold.

Here is the reality: Let's say we tear up the Constitution and we have a Constitutional Convention. They get in and get control. They completely hijack the process which, as we know, is relatively easy for them to do. They have the control files, they're using entrainment on telecommunications, and have all these different mechanisms that we're discussing. What happens to us?

Cynthia McKinney: We become like compost and it's the Soylent Green matter.

C. Austin Fitts: I don't think most Americans understand how, once you pull the covering of the Constitution, we become simply a natural resource to be harvested like any other natural resource.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes, with no rights.

C. Austin Fitts: Not only without rights, but with robotics and artificial intelligence arriving.

Cynthia McKinney: That's right, and the future looks bleak.

C. Austin Fitts: Let's discuss what the world would look like if we didn't enforce the Constitution. One of the other secrets here is that they've been shrinking the pie. They've been increasing their own pie by shrinking the whole pie.

I've said that the current wealth globally is one percent of what it could be if we had a system where we could trust each other.

If you look at how oppressive this demonic force is and the possibilities if we reverse it, the wealth is so incredible. But I'm not only talking about financial wealth.

We've existed in a world where living wealth and financial wealth have a win-lose relationship. So it's the Popsicle Index going down while the Dow Jones index is rising. Imagine a world where the more you drive the Dow index up, the higher the Popsicle Index goes. So when you talk about a win-win world where the young people see extraordinary opportunity to create living wealth or financial wealth, you're seeing a world, which is a wonderful world to be a part of.

Cynthia McKinney: If we bring it full circle, we're back with our students.

C. Austin Fitts: Right, we are.

Cynthia McKinney: The picture that you painted for them, as well as of them, are young people who are excited about the future, they are excited about their opportunities, and recognize that they have opportunities for a fantastic kind of growth that, perhaps, they hadn't thought about for themselves before. But through our mutual interaction, now we're starting to think, "Maybe we can do this. We can do that."

This is good for society.

C. Austin Fitts: Right. We can increase the pie more than they can.

One thing that keeps returning to my mind over and over is, if you look at the lists of competitiveness, who is the most competitive country or city in the world? Hong Kong is number one. This is a city that has reinvented itself again and again, and there is no harder working population than that population. Yet when you're in Hong Kong, what you realize is that the young people are not excited about the future in Hong Kong. They see that their freedom is diminishing.

Here the young people are so excited about building the future and building the future with the people around them and interacting globally. We've had students from Sri Lanka and Bhutan and Nepal, and they were like puppies swarming with each other. You see the power of that energy to create and build. Or you come to the United States, and they are so depressed about the future.

I'll use the US, for example. You observe the US children and the kids here, and see how the parents and families support these children, and you watch the way they are treated in the United States. Don't even get me started on student loans!

Cynthia McKinney: Yes, because I have a full complement of student loans.

C. Austin Fitts: What you're seeing is that question of one vision of the future where that attraction to freedom and opportunity is driving the increase explosively and the other where they're almost ready to quit.

I saw a great interview with Jack Ma, the head of Alibaba, and he was talking about how Alibaba needs to use artificial intelligence robotics to give small businesses a tool to flourish. If small businesses can flourish, the transition could work. But if you use robotics and AI to take away all the business from the small business, the future is not going to work.

It's the same either-or, and I think it's so clear and simple. The question is: How do I help my generation and your generation understand that we have to create those conditions for the young people or there will be no future?

Cynthia McKinney: Here on this side of the planet, though, I think we have a concept that I've bought into and basically shaped my entrepreneurship class around it, and that is Gandhian engineering. So we figure out ways to provide a solution for society that provides extra for more people with less.

C. Austin Fitts: Right, and it's very doable.

Let's talk about how. One thing I know you've been doing is being part of a group called Unrig, which are open source solutions.

The reality is that if we're going to enforce the Constitution and deal with the money, a lot of people in America get government checks. So we're going to have to come up with a way of creating income so that the government can't blackmail them with the government checks. That is part of this.

Certainly as a Congresswoman you saw how everybody wanted their checks. So that is a complicated full system change. So whether, what you're doing with Unrig or what I'll do, I'm going to write scores of information and ideas about how. I don't want to cover all of that. I think, the important thing is that we can all figure out together – once we understand – that we enforce the Constitution, or else.

So you can either figure out how to make a life raft, or you can drown.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes, or you can experience the 'or else'.

C. Austin Fitts: My attitude is that we can figure this out once we're clear that that is our only opportunity. You can figure it out or die, and I'm not interested in dying – not yet.

I'll have a lot of information on how, but I want to summarize some of it. The first issue is that we individually in our own lives have plenty of power to switch our time, our attention, and our money. I call it 'coming clean'.

We don't have to watch the fake news; we can shut it off.

Cynthia McKinney: That's right.

C. Austin Fitts: We don't have to buy products from the Ziocons and the pilgrims who are behaving in Luciferian ways. We can just say 'bye'.

This is my big one: We do not have to put money in the banks that are stealing from us and are stealing from the US government.

I'll put up a link to an old article Coming Clean, but whether it's our bank deposits, our media attention, our investments, or our purchases, we don't have to play.

Cynthia McKinney: Exactly. Now what I've tried to do is to buy local. From my food to my clothes I don't buy anything big or corporate, and I certainly don't buy the Unilever and all of that.

C. Austin Fitts: So when you're here in Bangladesh, you have great local options. I've been amazed walking around the streets and the mall. There are incredible local options on everything. Where I am now, forget it. In 2000 I could do more; now it's really tough.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes, because the reality is different in the US. If you don't get it from Wal-Mart, where are you going to purchase it? Amazon?

C. Austin Fitts: I do more and more online. I'm trying to wean myself from Amazon because if you see where they are going, I don't like it. Ever since they bought into the CIA, I don't know if this is Amazon or not. This simply could be the CIA buying up everything.

But you can do what you can do, and you can definitely do it with your bank deposits because the bankers are the ones who have engineered the financial coup d'état.

Cynthia McKinney: So where do we place our – in my case – very meager deposits?

C. Austin Fitts: If you look at how financial leverage works in the system, there is no such thing as a meager bank deposit. Your bank deposits are far more powerful than most people realize.

I have a piece on my website called How to Find a Good Local Bank. It's very rare in America that there is not at least one or two good local banks and credit unions. If you go through that, you can find it. We have a couple of Solari Reports on how to find a good local bank.

Remember, we're not merely trying to get away from the criminals; we're trying to get behind the 5-10% net energy plus people.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes, we want to build.

C. Austin Fitts: So let's return to the 10% slugs and the 10% net energy plus. You need to be sending the blood to the heart, the brains, and the lungs – not to the toes and the fingers. So we're trying to get you in business with people you know and trust.

Everybody at Solari knows I love my bankers and I trust my bankers. I think the entire financial system could crash, and they would still be operating. They're the most overcapitalized banks in America, but they are very good at what they do. Their business is helping individuals and families and small business. I really, really trust them, and they're very faithful and competent. I feel good because I know if I have a problem, I can be anywhere in the world and I can call them and they are there.

Part of it is getting every aspect of your life and money with people you can count on, and that feels great. So we're trying to move the energy back to the heart, the lungs, and the brain, and do it in a way which is good for me and I feel safe in this world.

When the enemy of the state hit me, I couldn't trust my bankers, and I believe my bankers organized to steal from me. There is no worse feeling than having warriors in bankers who are working for the other team.

I'll put up the link to the Coming Clean article, but being here with you in Bangladesh, Cynthia McKinney is entirely clean. You're about as clean as one can get, and you do much to support the 5-10% net energy plus all over the world.

I want to point out that some people say, "It's hopeless." The Ziocons, in particular, are so good at marketing the idea, "It's hopeless. There is nothing you can do."

I would like to point out that there are many examples of success stories where they have been completely defeated. One of my favorites is home schooling.

Cynthia McKinney: I have seen the results of home schooling. It's always been on the block in Congress under attack. The parents would bring their children, and they are the smartest kids!

C. Austin Fitts: Right. These kids in Bangladesh feel and act like home school kids do back at home.

Another one I wanted to bring up – and I don’t know if you’ve been watching Vaxxed – but the Vaxxed team has done an incredible job. They made a great documentary about vaccines. Since then, they’ve been going around the country on a bus filming case studies, and the information is thoroughly power, power, and power. We’ve been seeing an explosion of documentaries in the health freedom area, and the pushback on health freedom is overwhelming. That’s why the consumers are overwhelming the GMOs.

Now California is scheduling glyphosate as a carcinogen, and Monsanto and those people can’t stop it. The push is too strong.

Cynthia McKinney: I remember in 2010 when I was in the United Arab Emirates, and had the opportunity to meet the chief medical officer for the state of Pakistan. She was a woman, and I told her, “You don’t want Bill Gates or the Gates Foundation in your country.”

She looked at me as if , “Who is this telling me that?” She was all excited because she had a chance to shake Bill Gates’ hand.

Now the state of India is filing a lawsuit against the Gates Foundation. I was there when they were forcing the soldiers to take the vaccines in the US military.

C. Austin Fitts: And they still are.

Cynthia McKinney: I was calling them out, and I was called ‘kooky’ and ‘looney’ and, “That girl doesn’t know what she’s talking about.”

Now it's seven years later, and many people have died, and there are babies being born with abnormalities.

C. Austin Fitts: Where the pushback has to happen is, I can come clean with my own money, but I still pay taxes. Actually, I really don't have to pay a great deal of taxes because I still have a lot of tax loss carried forward, thanks to the Department of Justice.

We all have to pay taxes, and where we need collective action – both at the local, state, and Federal level – is to begin to implement the financial management laws and the Constitutional provisions together related to appropriations. If you see what I'm going to put up, there is a lot of information about that and we'll get into that shortly. That needs to be part of an ongoing conversation.

One thing that you pointed out to me yesterday is that it needs to include the Fed bill and the Treasury place-based and other financial disclosures. So we will have much on that, but that has always been the tricky political issue where the Ziocons and pilgrims are masters at pulling people's feet out from under them.

Cynthia McKinney: In 2006, and I'm absolutely fed up with the wars. Sherry Peel Jackson lives around the corner from me and I say, "Sherry, I would like to contract with you so you can do a series of workshops for my constituents just teaching them what you know."

I lost the election – or it was stolen – and Sherry Peel Jackson ends up in prison. So we never had a chance to talk about the money. I wanted to discuss about how our tax dollars are being used against our will to finance these wars.

C. Austin Fitts: They are also being used to finance the war on us.

Cynthia McKinney: That's right, but I also wanted to mention that it so happened that the legislation to finance the wars in 2007 passed with exactly the number of votes required – 218 in the House. Had I been there, I would have voted 'no' but I was targeted by Rahm Emanuel. My absence is what allowed us to move forward into this terrible predicament that we're now in.

Imagine the conversation if the Constitution was actually enforced and what kind of world it would be. I question in my own way, had I been there in the Congress in 2007, and voted no, and the 218 went the other way, what would our conversation be now?

C. Austin Fitts: Maybe the $27 trillion bailouts might not have happened, or they wouldn't have happened the way they happened.

Cynthia McKinney: If I would have been there, I would have at least sought a vote on the transparency and the auditability of those organizations that receive the funding. I think that merely one sentence would have changed the entire outcome.

C. Austin Fitts: I totally agree. One thing I think we are trying to express is how much the war and violence question is connected to the money question.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes.

C. Austin Fitts: There was one other point that I wanted to bring up, and that is that I have allies who say, “Let’s all stop paying taxes.”

If you do that, then you fail to finance the social safety net for a large number of people, and you hiccup cash flows for a large number of good businesses. Now that they’ve stolen $40 trillion, they’re in the catbird seat. If you implode the system, they get to pick up everything cheap.

Cynthia McKinney: That is exactly what happened in Russia.

C. Austin Fitts: Exactly. They can harvest an implosion.

Cynthia McKinney: Absolutely.

C. Austin Fitts: What I’ve always said is, “No, we’re not going to have a tax revolt; we’re going to have a tax enforcement. We’re going to put our taxes in escrow, and we’re going to require enforcement of the financial management laws, and going to use control of the cash to be for the rule of law.”

Cynthia McKinney: What happens when that 5-10% - the slugs – are in the Congress and they are the executive branch and in the judiciary branch?

C. Austin Fitts: If you escrow the taxes, it depends on how you do that. The logical way is to do state and county escrows.

For example, and this is just one way to do it, you put the money in the escrow. You send the check for the military and send the check for the debt. You say, “With respect to all the domestic expenditures, until you’re in compliance with the laws for financial management, we are sending you $100 million and you are sending us $100 million. So don’t send us the $100 million. We’ll take the $100 million here, and I do a common law ‘right of offset’, and we’ll take care of our own obligations here. Thank you very much.”

Cynthia McKinney: We need some of these peace organizations to do that kind of analysis and tell us what the amount is. I’m ready and I’m in.

C. Austin Fitts: That’s why place-based financial disclosure is so important. What you will see as soon as you study financial disclosure is that we are paying the government $150 an hour to do something that we can do for $25 an hour plus healthcare.

If, instead of them collecting all the money and sending it back to us, we would do a ‘right of offset’ within the escrow, the opportunities are enormous. Now it’s going to take all of us to take responsibility. No making money on helping them bring narcotics into our neighborhood. That has to stop. Transparency can address a lot of these issues.

So I will write much about that, and all of us – you with Unrig and us with Solari and many other people – are going to start now. We’re having a conversation about ‘how’.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes.

C. Austin Fitts: It’s going to take all of us and that is what is important for everyone.

Cynthia McKinney: We can crowdsource our solution.

C. Austin Fitts: That’s right! We’re going to crowdsource Constitutional enforcement.

Cynthia McKinney: Yes!

C. Austin Fitts: And it can be done. It’s better than dying.

We simply have to figure out how to have fun crowdsourcing our Constitutional enforcement.

Each one of us can come clean in a way that energizes our life. The other thing we can all do in every aspect of our life is support the 5-10%. We are the Titanic Turners and let’s support them wherever we can.

If you are part of an alumni network – let’s say you’re a leader in raising money for your university and the slugs are in charge –

you can change your support. You can do it at state and local levels, the Federal government you can do it in civic organizations, and you can do it in business.

If you're working for a Ziocon company, get the hell out!

Cynthia McKinney: Dealing with the phenomenon that most people think Congress is certainly bad but their congress person is very good, when I was asked to do some commentary on the Jon Osoff/Karen Handel race, I looked at one thing that made me a whistleblower, and that is the pledge that I had to sign, essentially giving my loyalty to another country – which was Israel.

C. Austin Fitts: APEC gave you that?

Cynthia McKinney: APEC, of course, but they have changed the tactic now.

C. Austin Fitts: They didn't want to give you a passport; they only wanted the signature?

Cynthia McKinney Yes, however, now they require every candidate for Congress to issue a statement. You can go on Karen Handel's website, and see her Israel statement. You can go on Jon Osoff's website, and see his Israel statement.

What I would say is, that one tool people use for the public statement on Israel that the incumbent or the challenger posts: If they signed it, then they're a loser.

C. Austin Fitts: So how do I find that?

Cynthia McKinney: It will be on their website.

C. Austin Fitts: On APEC's website?

Cynthia McKinney: No, on the candidate's website. If Sue Smith is running for House of Representatives from Kansas and if Sue Smith has a statement about Israel, you know that she signed the pledge, and you don't vote for her.

C. Austin Fitts: Right. So how do you do it if they've signed the pilgrim pledge? Those are secret.

Cynthia McKinney: I don't know very much about the pilgrim pledge.

C. Austin Fitts: We need an underwriting capacity here.

Cynthia McKinney: The only thing that I can say is that when given the choice to choose between a group of people who don't care about the United States and a group of people who do care about the United States, I have no choice but to make a choice, and I choose to stand with the people who care about the United States.

C. Austin Fitts: Clearly there are some groups of Americans, some of which I believe are in the pilgrim group, but a lot of whom have operational responsibility to make the United States function and who understand that we can't afford to let the United States collapse.

Cynthia McKinney: That's right.

C. Austin Fitts: They know that if we don't have that piece of real estate and the security that it provides and the wealth that it provides, we are in serious trouble.

The neocons and some of the pilgrims don't care; they're that psychopathic that they think they can be fine. But you have others who are not psychopathic, and they know.

They may play 'follower' in this situation. You'll see a lot of Titanic Turners when the Scorpions are in charge, they will act like Pigs instead of Titanic Turners. There is no point in fighting; you have to go with the flow.

Part of what we're trying to do is get some of those Pigs to turn into Titanic Turners.

Cynthia McKinney: And that is possible. I remember Amilcar Cabral who was very instrumental in getting rid of the Portuguese from Africa pertaining to his Colonial experience. One of his theses was that you would have allies from the class that benefits from the wrongdoing. The encouragement of the pilgrims who have now become Piggies because the Scorpions are in charge to become Titanic Turners is something that we can accomplish by our opposition to the Scorpions and the 10% of the slugs.

C. Austin Fitts: I've seen much of this in my clients and subscriber base. You will have people who long ago were supporters of Israel or they're Jewish and are part of these networks, and are appalled at what is going on in the Palestinians. They are appalled at all of this, and don't really know where to go to help organize to be an alternative.

I would say this. If you look at every group and, when I was a kid in Philadelphia, it was the Vatican, the Jews, and the Masons. You had these three power groups. Over time the real criminal element in each one rose to power.

Part of the problem is that crime pays. You're encouraging the worst behavior, and everybody is trying to compete. So you have a prisoner's dilemma problem.

Part of what we are trying to figure out is, we were all within these different pockets and watching, and within our own ethnic or religious or tribal group, the thugs were in control.

Cynthia McKinney: But we recognized that there are some good people in there. What do I need to do? I use the Civil Rights movement as an experience to draw from, and there were many people in the North who were watching what was going on in the South on their televisions, and said, "We have one Viola Liuzzo." She was a housewife in Michigan and could have remained a housewife. She could have stayed there, but she said, "No, I have to be a part of the change. I have to stand with these people who are opposing this."

She left her home, went to Alabama, and was shot. It turns out that it was an FBI informant who either shot her or was sitting in the truck next to the person who shot her.

We have these people of good will in every one of these groups. They are encouraged when they see people challenging bad guys. So we have a responsibility to challenge them, first of all, so we're not complicit, but also to inspire those good people to join us. That's who would beat them.

C. Austin Fitts: When I worked on community developments, turning neighborhoods around with equity investment, or whatever group I'm in, I know who my slugs are and I know how to avoid them. When I go into a different group, I don't know who the slugs are.

Part of these first steps for all of us is figuring out – in anything that we're a part of – how we can support the 5-10%, and how do we help the 5-10% network across all these different worlds and cultures and countries and continents. We're up against a global demonic force, and we have to be a global force. We have to find a way for that 5-10% to build the networks of cooperation and trust, and that's why I return to the children. You have to circulate the kids. They have to build those relationships because that's the glue that is going to create this world.

So you're doing it.

Cynthia McKinney: I'm trying, and I'm glad that you put the theoretical framework around what I'm doing because I hadn't analyzed it that way.

C. Austin Fitts: You just do it and are too busy doing it to think about it and you're teaching it.

Before we close, tell us how we keep up with you and your work. I'm always checking in with you, "What are you going to do about this? What are you going to do about that?"

So how do we follow Cynthia McKinney?

Cynthia McKinney: The first place to go is to my website www.AllThingsCynthiaMcKinney.com. I sometimes get behind, but I have a commitment that I respond to every email that comes to me from there because people have taken their time to go there and send me a message, so I will respond to it.

The second way is that I post a lot on Facebook and Twitter.

C. Austin Fitts: I can forgive you for having a Facebook account.

Cynthia McKinney: I know, and I resisted it for a long time!

C. Austin Fitts: Here is my theory: When the general population sees the opportunity and sends you sufficient donations, you will pay a lovely young man like the one I talked to last night to create the web capacity so that you won't need to use Facebook. That will happen.

Cynthia McKinney: That is exactly right!

C. Austin Fitts: So your website, then Facebook?

Cynthia McKinney: And Twitter.

C. Austin Fitts: And Twitter.

Cynthia McKinney: You know there are many Facebook pages that have my name on it. The one that is associated with me – that I respond to – is ‘Cynthia McKinney Official’.

C. Austin Fitts: You do a lot of interviews, right?

Cynthia McKinney: Yes I do. I’ve been focused on what is called the ‘alt right’, but there is some kind of synergy happening because I know I’m ‘left’, and all of a sudden I’ve broken bread with a whole lot of ‘right’ people, and we’re like peas in a pod. So this is a conversation that defeats divide and rule.

I teach my students Paulo Freire, who outlined the mechanisms of oppression and the tools for liberation. Unity for liberation, collaboration, organization, cultural synthesis – these are the tools for liberation.

I try to walk that talk and I try to practice it. So I’ve been talking to militia people, Christian identity people, and whoever they say that I’m supposed to hate – those are the people who I want to talk to.

C. Austin Fitts: I'm trying to draw a circle around those intersections and say, "You all can do what you want to do. If you can figure out a way for your revenues to be greater than your expenses, do it."

If you can economically optimize your solutions, then you are self-financing. That is how I started The Solari Report. I turned to my lawyer in 1998 and said, "You and I are going to have to find a way to support ourselves at retail because, unless individuals support us, we can't be loyal to individuals. So that's what we're going to have to do."

Cynthia McKinney, this has been a great conversation, and it's the beginning of a discussion that is going to continue on how we are going to enforce the Constitution until we do.

Cynthia McKinney: Until we do!

C. Austin Fitts: Anything is possible, and anything can happen.

As you know, I have a theory that the Midianites are going to kill each other if we will only get together. So if the faithful, competent people get together, then the Midianites will kill each other, and it will fall to us to try to make it work.

Before we end, this has been a great conversation. It's been a great launch of what will continue to be a great conversation. Is there anything else that you would like to say before we close?

Cynthia McKinney: I think my sister, Catherine Austin Fitts, has just said it all!

C. Austin Fitts: I'm flying back to the United States, and so are you – but not for long enough as far as we in the United States are concerned. But you will be back and forth, right?

Cynthia McKinney: Yes, I will be back and forth.

C. Austin Fitts: The one request I do have is: If there is an opportunity for anybody to hear you speak or support your efforts in the United States, you will let me know and we will publish that on The Solari Report. I want to make sure that our subscribers and readers know how to follow 'All Things Cynthia McKinney'.

Cynthia McKinney: Okay. Thank you.

C. Austin Fitts: We're in cahoots! Ladies and gentlemen, you have a great day.

MODIFICATION

Transcripts are not always verbatim. Modifications are sometimes made to improve clarity, usefulness and readability, while staying true to the original intent.

DISCLAIMER

Nothing on The Solari Report should be taken as individual investment advice. Anyone seeking investment advice for his or her personal financial situation is advised to seek out a qualified advisor or advisors and provide as much information as possible to the advisor in order that such advisor can take into account all relevant circumstances, objectives, and risks before rendering an opinion as to the appropriate investment strategy.
