3rd Quarter Wrap Up Control 101: A Discussion with Catherine

November 2 , 2017

C. Austin Fitts: Good evening and welcome to The Solari Report. Today is November 2, 2017, and I am Catherine Austin Fitts, and delighted that you could join us this evening.

Tonight is Part IV of the 3rd Quarter Wrap Up, Control 101, a Discussion with Catherine. I'm going to start with a story – one of my favorites. In 2016 we were having a subscriber lunch at the 21 Club in New York. I had to arrange for Richard Dolan to give the luncheon speech. If you know Richard, you know that he always exudes confidence and energetic intelligence.

I was surprised to see him walk into the private dining room. He looked a bit shaken, which is very unusual for Richard. He had been working on his new TV series and book on false flags. The TV series is out, and I strongly recommend it. I'm hoping that the book will be out by January.

Greeting him, I said, “Richard, how are you?” He thought for a minute, and then – being his usual upfront self – said, “The research on false flags has been deeply troubling. I'm struggling for words to express exactly how I feel.”

I laughed and said, “I think I know exactly how you feel. You’re feeling like a chicken who has begun to envision the farmer’s point of view and to conceptualize the science of livestock management.”

He was quite taken aback, and he looked at me with surprise. He said, “Yes, that is exactly it.”

When I wrote up the theme, I said that it was one of those moments where you share an insight with a person of great intelligence and integrity, and get a sense that all your loneliness just disappears. It was really very touching.

When I first decided to do the 3rd Quarter Wrap Up theme on Control 101 that was a change from what we were planning, which was ‘Go Local’. I brainstormed my outline with a wonderful Robert Dupper when I was in The Netherlands for a week. He insisted, “Look, you have to come up with an overall framework that makes this really very simple. You need a top-down way of looking at this that can express the entire subject. If you get into the detail, it could take an Encyclopedia Britannica to cover the whole topic.”

So I wanted to tell that story about Richard because it gives you a very easy framework. There is a farmer, there is a flock of chickens, and then we have something called the ‘art and science of livestock management’, and that is a very simple way of talking about what the control system is all about.

Living in an agricultural community helps me understand human control systems. Once you learn livestock management when it applies to animals, it helps you to understand much more about what is happening in the human control systems. We are, after all, animals and mammals. There are many parallels between the animal livestock systems and our livestock systems. It takes a bit of getting over the unpleasantness of fathoming that the leadership views themselves as ‘the farmer’ and we as ‘the chickens’.

The important thing to understand about our control systems is that they are ancient; they’ve been evolving organically for centuries. This is complex, this is deep, and this involves numerous different aspects. On one hand, many of the systems that involve control were not created just for the reason of control; there are systems that were created because that is what civilizations do. They build systems that help them leverage their combined knowledge and infrastructure to lead their daily lives.

The reality is that every system that we create is an opportunity for those with the greatest power to build more control into the system and more dependency on the system. So the benefit of each system often comes with a price that relates to control. We have amazing smartphones that give us access to immense amounts of delightful information and useful information and instant communication, but they also come with mind control, predatory capitalism, and surveillance. So it’s a double-edged sword.

Throughout history, control has been progressively reinvented in response to the introduction of new technology. I'm always trying to encourage people to read Tim Wu's book The Master Switch: The Rise and Fall of Information Empires. What it really shows is from the time that information technology truly exploded – whether it was the telegraph, the telephone, the TV, the radio – periods of innovation followed by consolidation into one or two monopolies that then further centralize control. This has been occurring for a long, long time. As that integration happens, we find that the centralizing becomes more powerful. Clearly, with digital technology, that centralization has exploded over the last 20-30 years, and it's really come to the point where, if you look at where it's headed, it raises the question about the very existence of human civilization.

I would say that human civilization is now, in fact, in question. That means that if we are going to preserve – let alone grow – a human civilization, we must understand the control systems, and we need to understand how to reverse the balance of power.

I said that I was going to do the 3rd Quarter Wrap Up on 'Go Local' but I changed it to 'Control 101'. That was because every time I started to deal with the local issues of how we begin to rebuild and decentralize power – financial power and economic power and political power – I ran into the fact that my friends and allies couldn't understand or appreciate the control systems. That meant that they were going to keep being controlled, and there was never a way to develop with them plans to handle centralized control in practical and economic ways.

There was no way to send the system at a local level into progressively more out-of-control. That meant that there was zero chance of success.

So I said, “Okay. Let’s step back and let’s start to get a clear coherent picture about the control systems. Unless and until we do, we can’t make headway on many practical issues.”

Then I hit another wall because during my entire lifetime, but certainly, for the period from 1995 to 2012, I’ve been dealing on a personal level with an extraordinary interaction with the covert side of the control systems, and the overt side, too. Clearly, I’ve had much more experience with the covert than many people who I know and work with. That gave me plenty of knowledge.

The reality is that I’ve been so busy accumulating the knowledge and building and operating a business that I’ve never stopped to process all of the knowledge. I’ve been researching and doing an abundance of researching and networking to try to confirm my knowledge, to tighten it and expand it because I don’t like to take my knowledge on any subject just from personal experience. One person is not a random sample. So I like to confirm it with other people’s experiences and try to find the best knowledge managers and scholars on topics to see how much more they can enlighten my understanding.

When you learn about covert control and overt control, one thing that you experience is not the violence and cruelty of the farmer. You experience that, but that is part of the business we are in. Instead, what you do is experience the violence and cruelty of the chickens. The great secret of control in any system is, yes, highly centralized at the top, but the farmer doesn't do the dirty work. Invariably, the farmer gets and incentivizes the other chickens to do their dirty work.

I use one of the quotes from The Matrix in my write-up. I love the scene in The Matrix where Morpheus says, "The Matrix is a system, Neo. The system is our enemy. But when you're inside, you look around, and what do you see? Businessmen, teachers, lawyers, carpenters – the very minds of the people we are trying to save. But until we do, these people are still part of that system, and that makes them our enemy. You have to understand that most of these people are not ready to be unplugged, and many of them are so inured, so hopelessly dependent on the system, that they will fight to protect it."

This is one of the great truths that I find many people have difficulty facing. We want to blame it on "them" far, far away. "It's all "their" fault. "They're" bad. "They're" corrupt." The reality is that it's us chickens implementing control in America. The swamp is from sea to shining sea.

The reality is that most of us are willing to implement the control – whether it's out of ignorance or whether it's out of fear or whether it's out of jealousy or whether it's out of greed – and do it with surprising ease and for a surprisingly small amount of compensation. That is one of the reasons I struggled to learn how all the money works from a little neighborhood to the top of the planet.

I couldn't understand why people would sell hundreds of millions of equity down the river for pennies. It never made sense.

The reality is that to put together a very high-level view of control at a summary level for the 3rd Quarter Wrap Up, it meant that I had to process my personal grief that has been accumulated from the pain of thousands and thousands of personal and professional betrayals, all leading back into the control system. It was struggling to walk and work through that pain that really made this hardest of all. However, it was a very useful exercise for me.

I think that the only way we can act in this service of freedom is to: 1) Face our reality, and 2) Compost our grief. As we do, we become more coherent and in a better position to act.

So, who is in control? It comes back to the same thing that I'm telling you all the time. The most important unanswered question of our day relates to our governance system. Who runs our governance system on Planet Earth? How is that governance system structure organized? What are the goals? What is the consensus reality? What is the map of the people who lead it? What are the assumptions built into its time and money budget? I would love to see those financial statements!

One of the most powerful control techniques the farmer has is that all the knowledge regarding the farmer – the art and science of livestock management, and how the farm works – are kept entirely in the dark from the chickens. Each chicken is on a ‘need to know’ basis and educated to be not capable of connecting the dots and putting together a big picture on the farmer and the art and science of livestock management.

Think about how amazing it is: We live on a planet where we are not allowed to understand how the governance system on our planet works. It’s a complete mystery to us and that is amazing. Even after spending a lifetime trying to learn how it works, I still can’t go to a blackboard and chart it all out. I can guess, and I can engage in what that wonderful Joseph Farrell would call ‘high-octane speculation’, but I couldn’t go into a court of law and prove what the organizational system actually looks like.

It reminds me of one fellow who claimed that he had spent time with aliens. He said that the Andromedans said, “Why do you have to pay taxes on the planet on which you were born?” Good question! After all, if we can print fiat currency out of thin air, we don’t need to pay taxes.

Anyway, if you look at this kind of ignorance, it causes incredible misunderstandings, it causes incredible pain, and I think it’s baffling that we tolerate this situation. I’ve always wanted to know. It’s like a symphony orchestra playing in the dark or bumper cars driving around in the dark – it won’t ever work. You need to turn on the lights.

The first step is to face the fact that we don't know, and we need to know. The second step is to have the faith that enough of us can work together with a positive vision of a human civilization and a human future sufficiently so that we can figure it out. I think that if enough smart people go at this, we can indeed figure it out.

One of my first points about the control system is that we have this invisible governance system. I nickname the people running it 'Mr. Global' only as a metaphor to hold the space. So we have this governance system. The important thing that you need to know is that this governance system operates and controls by force. Force is the beginning and the end of how it controls. Force is the bedrock. We have to get that clear within our minds.

All control systems on our planet begin and end with force. Force is the ultimate enforcement mechanism. The people who control, do so because they can kill with impunity. That means that they can kill without regard to the law. There is no accountability under our laws when they kill. It's very important that we break through the trance and get clear about this.

In the Western world, force rarely shows its face. It's always better to use financial, legal, and political systems to do the dirty work. "Oh, it's really complicated."

Then there is disinformation – fake news and fake science and fake history – and our good friend, mind control, which is getting stronger every day. There is an endless number of visible and invisible systems used to achieve control these days. The effectiveness of all these systems depends on the ability to maintain physical force and control.

So while the amount of control systems that are depended on by the government system in percentage terms are less than in medieval times, force is critical as ever as the bedrock that keeps all the control systems working.

This is why I call it the “central banking-warfare model.” The central banks print paper, and the military expenditures – globally over $1 trillion a year is now going to be $700 million in the overt US budget and doesn’t even count the covert –takes war to make it work. The central bankers print money out of thin air and then exchange it for real labor and real natural resources. Why would you exchange your labor and natural resources for something printed out of thin air? It’s because, ultimately, the people at the top of the exchange have a gun pointed at their head.

I’m baffled that many Americans don’t understand this fact, and that is because we’ve been dealing with the iron fist in the velvet glove for so long, and the iron fist is now deep in our subconscious. If you do something that threatens someone’s safety, they will suddenly snap at you like somebody who knows how dangerous it is.

I'll never forget being on a panel with a very intelligent, wonderful activist that started to make very denigrating comments about gun nuts –which I am one. I turned to her and said, “I guess you don't want your social security,” knowing full well that it is an important source of her income.

She sneered at me, “The two issues have nothing to do with each other.” She couldn't fathom that if the American people gave up their guns, the chances that the political system would abrogate their contracts to them would be increased significantly. That includes relieving them of their property. If I'm right about Northern California, look at what recently happened.

Here is what is interesting. If you travel outside of the G-7 nations or spend time with immigrants, they are much more conscious of the role of force in the control system.

One of my favorite quotes is from Samuel Huntington who said, “The West won the world not by the superiority of its ideas or values or religion, to which a few members of other civilizations were converted, but rather by its superiority in applying organized violence. Westerners often forget this fact; non-westerners never do.”

I've talked off and on over the last year about an excellent book on the African American slave trade called The Half Has Never Told. One thing that it describes is the systematic application of whipping and violence to create steadily increasing amounts of productivity in the African-American slave population in the cotton plantations. It's one of the juggernauts that built the first big pools of capital here in the United States. It's very much worth understanding.

Sometimes I think the slow burn is somewhat of a digital high-tech equivalent of the whipping machine. It's a chilling comparison to make. If you are interested in reading the book, the review is on the website.

I tell a story in my write-up of the Control 101 theme about one of many interactions with violence I had when I was in high school. Because of where I grew up and how I grew up, I had a very strong appreciation for the thin veil that lies between us, and the physical force used to control us. At a very young age, I would do everything I could to anticipate violence and related patterns.

I tell the story in the write-up - you might want to check it out. It's one of many times in my life that I've been able to stay alive despite physical threats, and that is because I can understand and see force around me. Clearly, there is an advantage to having grown up in a rough neighborhood, given the times we are in now and where we are headed. I think that is a skill I would love for all of you to nurture and develop at this time. We're in a change, and we're going to need it.

If you look at how our governance system works, the establishment can and has assassinated the President in broad daylight. When the establishment wants to go to war, they can and will engineer a false flag event, killing thousands of Americans. When the establishment wants gun control, they can and will engineer a series of school shootings across the United States. When the establishment wants a war on drugs or a war on terror, they can create the phenomenon necessary to justify it. If you look at recent headlines, this is getting more than very expensive.

Control starts with hardware, not software. We've been in a world where people think of power as coming from software. We've been in a software-driven world. Control starts with hardware because we're back to the physical material world. As I said, it's grounded in the ability to kill and control our physical world.

The global reserve currency, one of the greatest controls ever created, is controlled by the people who control the physical flows of information and trade – analog, not digital. They control the ceilings and the cables at the ocean's bottom. They control the satellites and drones that fly above them. They control the physical force or the means to produce the physical force necessary to protect and maintain these hard assets. This control gives them the ability to apply financial sanctions to the countries that depend on access to those trade flows.

One reason that force can be very difficult to see these days is because there are many ways of delivering it that are more or less invisible. Something called a ‘slow kill’, which can be done with electronic weaponry and be engineered to look like a nervous breakdown or disease. The weaponry works through the electronic waves. You can’t see it, and there you go. It appears as though something is happening to the person, which is part of their problem or their fault or their inability to handle the stress, or they are simply getting sick.

Assassinations can be made to look like suicides, or bicycle or skiing accidents, or car and plane crashes, and it often happens. I’m beating this drum because I want you to get the simple but very profound truth into your spirit. Control depends on force. You need to see the iron fist in the velvet glove. One of the reasons is that the velvet glove is coming off.

We’ve seen scores of bankers, natural health practitioners, and doctors who are curing cancer with natural methods experience many suspicious deaths during the last few years. We’ve seen ongoing false flag events. We’ve seen a Congressman being shot by ‘lone nuts’ while playing baseball. If the recent fires in Northern California were not wild – which it appears they might not have been – but engineered, or if the recent hurricanes were ‘steered’ like I believe hurricanes can be, we may be facing a domestic ‘Phoenix Program’. If you don’t know what the Phoenix Program is, look it up. That means that the beat-down, as the African-Americans used to call it, is no longer only in minority neighborhoods.

Another reason I want you to understand the role of control and the importance of control is because we are approaching an inflection point. If we don't restore our behavior, our finances, and our society back to the rule of law, we are going to head into a new phase that will jeopardize, if not tear up basic individual and property rights, and that is going to lead us back into mind control slavery and other very inhuman practices.

Sovereign governments are losing their monopoly and force within a place. That means that you and I can be subject to physical force to take our property or our lives. It can be applied by multiple private parties, and we have no one to look for to help. This is the case, despite paying a significant amount of tax money, for the kind of enforcement capacity that is supposed to be protecting us, and yet increasingly it can't, or it won't.

If we pay a significant amount of money for 'protection' and instead are subject to lawlessness and criminality by multiple parties, and indeed are financing our government to use that money to target and control us, it's simply a matter of time before we fail. We are basically financing a system which is rigged against us. If you finance your enemy, you know where that leads.

If we do nothing, we are headed into the abyss. If we want to avoid heading into the abyss, then we have to deal with the real governance structure and the force that controls it.

When your governance system does not have integrity, then it's a fait accompli that your financial system will not have integrity, and it's a fait accompli that your information system will not have integrity. So you and I have to deal with the fundamental integrity issue, which means that we have to deal with the force that maintains it and enforces the government system of the fundamental absence of integrity.

Until and unless we are willing to look at the force, to understand it, and to develop strategies to circumvent it so that we can move this back towards the law, we are going to spend an incredible amount of time on 'solutions' that don't work, or if anything, help the centralizers.

I sat at the Nexus conference listening to many, many people talk about how their cryptocurrencies were going to expand freedom, and they were fundamentally clueless about the integrity issues and the fact that you can't solve a governance problem of a governance structure implemented by force with a financial product. It 'ain't' going to work.

The second feature about control I want to discuss is that control is intimate. There are many control systems. We could read books continually about the different control systems – control files, covert operations, surveillance, mind control, etc.

However, until you can see how control flows into your life – how it works, how it organizes and impacts your spending, your investment of time and money, your associations – until you can understand that and see the history of your life, your family's life, your neighborhood's life, and the current flow of events and accelerating change around you-until you can see control in all the forms that it touches and impacts you, you will never see the control systems. You need to see it at an intimate level because at an intimate level is where you can get your power to start shifting the levers to remove yourself from control in a way that helps you, and do it in a way that helps the others around you.

I'll never forget when the first book about economic hit men was released. It was this true confession about events long ago and far away. Of course, it did nothing that would hiccup or change current transactions. It delivered this ultimate, limited, modified, hangout that made everybody feel really good. "Oh, we didn't mean harm; it just got out of control," and that was solace to the Americans who all wanted to enjoy the benefits of the global reserve currency without feeling bad about ourselves.

I was writing about what was happening in American communities; the lawlessness, the genocide, the drugs, the prisons, and no one would look at it. They were too busy saying, "Oh, it's so terrible what the American machinery is doing in these places far, far away."

It was almost as though their social prestige depended on it being far, far away. Literally, they didn't want to look at it in American communities, but the reality is that our children were being drugged or addicted or engaging in social abuse or involved in covert operations in our neighborhoods - and that was helping send cheap capital to Silicon Valley, Hollywood, Wall Street, and Washington while we were moaning about, “It’s so terrible what is going on in these villages far, far away.”

You started to realize that this is a form of escapism. It’s a form of entertainment. It’s a form of denial.

One of the most important reversals in understanding freedom right now is the invasion of people’s homes. There is a concept in our society that a man’s home is his castle. Well, now we’re seeing a significant assault on property rights, personal safety, privacy, including police powers of seizure, home invasions, searches without warrants, targeting people in their homes with non-lethal weapons, forced fluoride in the water systems, surveillance through the phone, TV, appliances, smart meters, assertion of eminent domain, not to mention the predatory mortgage lending and violence related to the war on terrorism and the war on drugs and all sorts of covert operations. I could go on and on. It is actually turning your home, on a non-voluntary and mandatory basis, into a sort of mind-controlled surveillance box. It’s one of the most frightening aspects of the competition by every cartel in the world to get deeper into your data and deeper into your body and your life, including through your home.

When I settled my litigation with the Federal government, I bought an extremely small, modest home. I set it up as an office base camp for a more nomadic life.

The reality is that I wanted to be prepared to move if I had to because in a lawless culture, who knows where you need to be and where you want to go. I didn't want to be controlled by my dependency on a big, expensive house.

So, the bedrock foundation of control is force. Control happens at a very intimate level, and the third point that I want to make about control is that control is a war for your mind.

I said that control rests on physical force, but physical force is not an effective control technique. Force is expensive, it spooks the herd, and it inspires vengeance. The most effective and economic control system is mind control.

It wasn't that way 100 years ago, but mind control has come a long way in the last 100 years. Mind control is a toolkit of practices in technology, many of which are quite old. One of the ancient practices was hypnosis. That was brought by the Templars from the Assassins during the Crusades in the Middle East. As a result, criminal hypnosis has been practiced for centuries in the West by the secret societies as one of the most important secret technologies that maintain their power.

Mind control technology and research blossomed with the Nazis during World War II, and that research and technology and some of the scientists were imported into the United States after the war through an operation called 'Operation Paper Clip'.

That capacity was married with infinite amounts of open-ended government checkbook funding for research and application and testing through major research universities, hospitals, and corporations. It was supplemented by funding from some of the most prestigious US foundations, including the Rockefeller Foundation.

That, combined with the innovation in digital technology, – electronics, communication, and other technological developments – has resulted in an explosion of mind control technologies that can be delivered on an individual and community basis at very low cost.

If we combine that with unlimited secret government and corporate funding, we have built up a very significant infrastructure to manage multiple mind control systems that can be economically delivered to both individuals and groups. So whether it is the smartphone, smart meters, cell towers, the TV, the Internet, pharmaceutical drugs, or other delivery methods, we have multiple ways of entraining people and reading and managing their thoughts and actions. Even now I keep talking about the Kingsman technology. The population can be and is being weaponized.

The reality is that there are two kinds of people in the Western world: people who have been mind-controlled and know it, and people who have been mind-controlled and don't know it. If you want to live a free and inspired life, you need to understand mind control and take steps to protect yourself from it. If you want to fix it, first you have to face it.

The Solari Report offers you an abundance of materials on mind control. We've done the interview on entrainment with Adam Trombly. I have a Solari Report I did before that on mind control. We had many movies on mind control in Solari Reports on movies with Jay Dyer and Jon Rappoport as well as our picks for 'Let's Go to the Movies.' You can find as selection under the "Lets Go to the Movies" section at the 3rd Quarter Wrap Up web presentation

During the last two years, Jason Worth and I have been writing book reviews, looking for books that help people understand how mind control is used to create addictions – addictions to consumer shopping, addictions to video games, addictions to pornography, addictions to gambling. Many of the addictions that we have are intentionally developed and created using these kinds of technologies. There are many, many reviews that we have placed on the website that can help. I want you to dive in. You can find a listing at the 3rd Quarter Wrap Up web presentation under "Solari Resources."

In last year's Annual Wrap Up, one of our recommended best books for 2017 was "Secret, Don't Tell" by Carla Emory. This is the best history on mind control available, going back to medieval times.

Next week we will publish my interview with Melissa and Aaron Dykes of Truthstream Media. They have done incredible work on mind control - I have been posting their videos regularly throughout the last year. I'm going to continue to post them because this is an area that is so very important to our efforts in helping you live a free and inspired life.

If you have your own mind, then you can navigate the road ahead. If you don't control your own mind, you are going to be at a severe disadvantage and I assure you, you will be working for Mr. Global.

The next feature of control I want to mention is that control is also a war for your pocketbook. Mind control is now number one, but it wasn't that long ago the financial system and the economic system was arguably the greatest, most effective, powerful, control system. There is no doubt that when you combine mind control technology with economic and financial control, you're really turbo-charging control. It's much of what we see today. The carrots and sticks that the economic control can deliver are extraordinary, and the ability of entrainment technology and subliminal programming to harvest your time and your money is off the charts.

The reality is that when you have all of these different kinds of technologies overlapping and working together, that is how you can end up with a financial and economic system that can be run significantly outside the law for long periods of time. People can literally not be consciously aware of it.

I repeat the story in my write-up, which was published in Dillon Read in Aristocracy of Stock Profits about the president of the CalPERS pension fund explaining to me that they were moving all of the money out of the country starting in the fall, which meant that as he was buying mortgage securities for the next ten years, he understood that it was a bubble and ultimately it would crash.

Clearly, the pension fund was not operating in the fiduciary best interest of the pension beneficiaries. Clearly, it was operating fundamentally outside the law.

Part of what happened was all of the money started missing the same time at HUD and DOD, and thanks to Dr. Mark Skidmore, we now know that number for only those two agencies is up to $21 trillion. Well, you're talking from fiscal 1998 forward. Basically, we're coming into 20 years of operating the Federal accounts significantly outside the law, including all the different subterfuges they claim they've created to operate outside the law. This is completely very far outside the law.

Imagine what it takes to get thousands of bureaucrats, all the different agencies, and banks involved, and all the different contractors involved to operate together that significantly outside the law. That is a feat requiring enormous and very effective control systems. If there is anything that proves how powerful the control systems are, it's that HUD and DOD managed to accumulated $21 trillion of undocumented adjustments - $1 trillion more than our total outstanding debt - over the last 17 years without anyone in Congress, besides Congressmen McKinney, Kucinich & Grayson, making a fuss.

The next feature that I want to talk about with regards to control is how complex it is. There are numerous complex control systems and techniques. As I said, a lot of control is built into all of the different systems that a civilization uses.

Jon Rappoport has some great descriptions about the many different cartels and players all competing and collaborating to devise an edge by creating a monopoly or by implementing greater control. In a centralizing system with great power at the top, everybody is competing to deliver more and more control upstairs and to implement more and more monopolies. So you can see, particularly over the centuries and as new technology facilitates it, how control becomes embedded and developed in everything.

I've made two lists of all the different systems. One is in alphabetical order, and then I redid the list in order of importance. I'm going to read it to you in order of importance:

1. Mind Control
2. Media and Fake News
3. Weaponized Population
4. Technology
5. Intelligence and Surveillance
6. Entrainment
7. Pharmaceutical Drugs
8. Secret Societies and Tribal Networks

Notice that all eight have been essentially – other than ‘Weaponized Population’, which gets into violence – systems that operate relatively subtly or invisibly and don't appear to be concretely violent.

I'll continue:

1. Space
2. Secrecy
3. Sex
4. Judicial, Legal, and Regulatory

Here we get into the bedrock foundation of force:

5. Assassination

6. Atmosphere
7. Financial and economic

There is part of the document where I get into the breakout of what is involved in 'Financial and Economic' because there are many important pieces there.

8. Military
9. Home
10. Control Files
11. Covert Operations
12. Patents and Intellectual Property
13. Religion
14. Science
15. Electronics
16. Taxation
17. Shunning
18. Infrastructure
19. Transportation

20. Patents and Intellectual Property
21. Religion
22. Science
23. Electronics
24. Taxation
25. Shunning
26. Infrastructure
27. Transportation
28. Torture and Targeting
29. Food
30. War
31. Energy
32. Water
33. Narcotic Drugs (as opposed to Pharmaceutical Drugs)
34. Weather and Disaster Manipulation
35. Disinformation
36. Enforcement
37. Family
38. Fake History
39. Chemicals
40. Criminal Enterprise
41. Culture and Consciousness
42. False Flags
43. Philanthropy
44. Soil
45. Vote and Poll Rigging
46. Education Commodities

Clearly, many of these systems are overlapping. In fact, many of the control systems work together. The more systems that a cartel can control, the more they can combine them to turbocharge control in a near-infinite variety of ways.

When I wrote Control 101, I started to put sections in each part, describing The Solari Reports and the libraries and the commentaries on the website that we've written directly or indirectly on this topic. I began to realize, "I'm reorganizing our entire libraries to this theme."

If you review everything that we've written or done on The Solari Report, much of it is about either how these control systems work or how the control systems are organized to harvest you economically. So the reality is that all of our libraries are about this information and it threads throughout. I would encourage you to start to dive into the libraries and take advantage of what is there.

The other thing that I wanted to mention is that I've been working with a team who has produced the Secret Space conferences, and they are preparing an online series, which we are going to partner up with them, called 'Out of Control', to explore these different control systems and how we overcome and change them. So stay tuned; there is more coming. This is an area that I am going to keep working on because it is absolutely important to me that you are developing a very powerful immune system to protect yourself from control and to protect yourself from being economically harvested by those control systems.

Let's turn to solutions. I think most people on The Solari Report, with a little work, can get a very good, high-level overview of how control works. The foundation of control is force; control operates at an intimate level, control is a war for your mind, you have to beat mind control, control is a war for your pocketbook, you have to protect your time and money, and control is complex. It's not easy or simple to learn every detail of these systems. However, if you start on a learning journey and do it in a way that you will enjoy, it can make you much more powerful.

So let's turn to solutions. I want to begin by saying that power and freedom are inside jobs. As John Cage the musician says, "Begin anywhere."

You are the only person who can make yourself free. For most people, it's not easy to do because the first step requires coming up with a way to generate an income that does not contribute to controlling or harming other people. You have to find a way to generate an income that helps other people, is useful to other people, and – if anything – helps them move out of control and become freer.

Once you get the economics worked out, every person's pathway is unique. Every person has a divine purpose for their life, and that vision is what sets the pathway. The practicalities depend very much on your particular situation and responsibilities, including family responsibilities.

The practicalities are changing. Your attention, time, and money every day and every week are unique to you. You have to organize that journey in a way where you enjoy that journey. Joy and love are where we get a large amount of our power.

Let me talk about some of the areas that are of strategic importance, and that I recommend you address. The first thing is prayer and mind. I believe at the root of what we are dealing with, we are experiencing spiritual warfare. The greatest insight that you as a person can access is through your own time and prayer.

I was talking about this to one of my favorite allies. They were saying, “Can’t you find a more nondenominational way to say this?”

I said, “No, I really can’t, but I’m not encouraging you to adopt my spiritual practice. I encourage you to do it in your own way in your own time. I am not into missionary work and I’m not into persuading you to do what I do or do it how I do it.”

One thing that I know is if you look at all the powers arrayed in the material world, there is only one power greater that can change them. If you want to access that power, you have to turn to the divine. You also have to shift your consciousness. It’s something that I work at every day. I could do much better; we could all do much better.

The reality is that we, as human beings, have the ability, with our minds and consciousness, to shift our reality, and that is why it is very, very important we use our minds and our consciousness to do whatever we can do to invent our way to a human future.

Literally, if we want a human future, we have to change our mind and shift our consciousness. Part of helping us do that is to access divine intelligence and power.

When I was saying to my ally, “Everybody can re-interpret these things into their own words and their own practice. They are very intelligent. They know how to do it.”

He said, “The one thing that I will say is that there are no atheists in a fox hole.”

One thing that you discover upon dealing with force goes along with a great Leonard Cohen line about only drowning men can see Jesus.

I first came to understand the power of divine intelligence because I had to call upon it when people were killing my business, my reputation, my finances, and then trying to kill my life. There was nothing that I could do to defend myself except call on spiritual powers. Sure enough, they showed up and it was amazing. I came to depend on miracles. I tell you that there is power to be accessed there, and it's greater than any material power in the world. You certainly need it. If anything, our society is headed into multiple fox holes, so it's there if you want it. It is a power that can be accessed.

I have a favorite story from Carl Jung that I've told many times. I'm not going to repeat it here, but I wrote it and placed it in our description under 'Control 101' on the website, and you can read it there.

It's about a woman who murdered her best friend and got away with it and proceeded to discover that all the living things, people, and animals around her basically hated her. The consequence of murdering her best friend was that she had murdered her own soul and had become shunned by society.

It's a reminder of what has happened to the United States. We have a great deal to come clean about, and we can't access the full power of divine intelligence until we reverse that by coming clean. I have a great article called Coming Clean that you can access and search for it on the website. It goes through a step-by-step process about how each one of us can come clean.

Part of that is we are experiencing a debasement of our culture, so we have the ability to reverse that debasement in our own lives. That is part of changing our minds and doing everything that we can to move to and remain in a higher mind.

I am always reminded of one of my favorite moments on The Solari Report when I was speaking with Dr. Gwen Scott. I was struggling with her information regarding the impact global spraying was having on our health, and after speaking with her, I decided we weren't going to talk about the impact on our health; we were going to reorganize the information into the ten action steps you can take to protect yourself from global spraying.

She listened very carefully as I read her the outline, and she said, “Dear, you forgot the most important one. You forgot grace. If you look at what is going on, we should all be dead, but we’re not. So something else is happening.”

Whether you’re accessing divine intelligence and power or trying to uplift your culture and our general culture, grace is, indeed, happening around us. I think that it is very important to access that.

Prayer and mind are action area number one and transparency is action area number two. This is something that I talk a great deal about on The Solari Report. Obviously, The Solari Report was created to provide transparency. I tell my favorite story about the evolution of cooperation and the work of Dr. Robert Axelrod talking about the role of transparency in creating a society where peace makes more money than war. That is my way of saying it. It’s in the Control 101 theme if you want to read it.

I think that transparency is a very important step. We need to be able to see what is happening.

One thing that concerns me is, if you look at all the systems used to control, what you’ll see is that many of them are designed to manipulate our databases – secrecy, fake news, fake science, fake history and the list continues. In essence, I think that mind control is the farmer’s plan to jump the curve to beat transparency. So if they can’t control the databases, they will control the processor. Fake news, fake science, fake history, and all of these things control and manipulate the databases.

With mind control, now you're talking about controlling the processors. In case the manipulation of the databases won't work, you have the processor to control both, and you will definitely have it nailed.

So it's prayer and minds, transparency, and now responsibility. You are responsible for you and it all starts with you. You know that already, which is why you are listening to this or reading Control 101. This is something that you are all going to have to do, and the people who will make headway are the people who take great responsibility.

After responsibility, comes integrity. Once you take responsibility, you have to be absolutely ruthless about who you associate with. In this kind of environment, with increasing lawlessness and increasing corruption, many things are changing at once. There are a lot of disruptions. Then you have to associate to the extent possible with people who have integrity – that means they are both competent, and they are moral. Make sure that you also encourage your friends and associates to do the same.

All it takes is one incompetent or one untrustworthy person to cause a significant drain on your time and energy. Every time I think that I finally have things operating at a real 'Six Sigma' level of integrity – boom! – I get hiccupped because through the chain, one of my associates, who has very high integrity, was helping someone in their family or took a chance on someone, and – boom! – we get hiccupped.

I often talk about my favorite Bible story, the story of Gideon. I posted it in our written description – the excerpt from the 2016 Christmas prayer book – where I tell a little about the story of Gideon. Essentially, what Gideon says is that you don't need many people; you just need people who are faithful and people who are competent. You need both. Then the divine intelligence can work through people who have both qualities. Gideon's army was 300, and they threw the Midianites out of Israel. Part of it was that the Midianites were so hateful and distrustful of each other that they broke down and killed each other. Essentially, the message is that the divine intelligence can be drawn in by 300 faithful, competent people working together.

It's unbelievably important to build that field that has real power and real light and vibration and can make miracles happen. You need that commitment to a very high integrity.

I'm always shocked when someone says that they are still banking at a bank that has committed massive frauds over the last ten years. I think, "Don't you know the signal you are sending?" There are all of these wonderful banks that are hardworking and honest, and basically, the signal you are sending is, "Crime that pays is crime that stays. I'm happy to bank with a bank that engages in crime against its customers."

Why in the world do they think they are safe? Why do they think their money is safe? Why do they think their data is safe? Good heavens look at the banks taking your data and your accounts and engaging in identity theft of your money and your data. It's frightening and it could destroy your credit.

I've often wondered if that is just mind control. The reality is: Get the criminals out of your pocketbook, get them out of your mind, and get them out of your life. The theme is 'Coming Clean', so look at the Coming Clean article. You have to get the corruption out of your system if you are going to build.

Think of this as a massive detox. You're just detoxing the criminals out of every aspect of your life.

The other thing is, if you look at the population, it's between the people who are willing to deal with reality and want to make real changes and the people who don't. It's very important that you focus your time and associations on the people who are eager to understand what is happening and help you take effective action. The world is changing. You don't have time to bring along people who don't want to come. So you need to focus your attention and associations as much as possible on people who do.

The last technique that I want to talk about is shunning. Shunning is an unbelievably powerful tool. The establishment uses it with great success, and we can, too. I relate some stories in the write-up on Control 101 that are really helpful to understand the dynamics here. I'm a big believer in shunning.

When the 2008 events unfolded, I was a former alumnus of Goldman Sachs. I had worked there in the summer, and got free research products. I wrote them a letter, and said, "I want nothing for free from you. I want no connection – energetic, business, or otherwise. You're out," and I wrote a major commentary about it. Imagine if thousands of people had done the same – wow!

Finally, enforce the law. We talked about this in the 2nd Quarter Wrap Up with plenty of detail and plenty of facts. We put a form letter to state legislators on the website to make it easier for you to access and write your state legislature. We have to enforce the law. By the 'law' I mean, in the United States, the important provisions of the US Constitution and other countries and any law related to fundamental human and individual property rights that you have. I cannot stress this enough.

Joseph and I, in our discussion of News Trends and Stories, talk about this in detail. I really encourage you to read that. We have to enforce the laws. We are coming to an inflection point, and our big problem is that we are financing these control systems. We are financing it with our communication, our telco bills, and our state and local and Federal taxes. All of these different large organizations – whether it's private corporations or public governments that are also pouring money into the private corporations – we are financing them, and we have to turn off the spigot.

If you finance people to control and destroy you, you will be controlled and destroyed. That is the question that we have to grapple with, each in our own way and each in our individual communities. How are we going to enforce the law? I'm telling you that we are coming to an inflection point.

My conclusion here is that if you understand the control systems, and you understand where they're going, the future presents two pathways. We can slip into mind control, which I believe leads to a form of slavery between AI and software. One ally calls the people in the Silicon Valley the 'silly boys'. They are literally planning on placing 100% of the jobs with AI and software. If you think that things are out of control now, wait until you see what happens when AI completely takes over.

We can slip into mind control, which is going to lead to one form or another of slavery, or we can figure out how to shift outside of mind control. All it's going to take is about 5-10%. We don't need everybody. Don't worry about everybody; just worry about the people who are ready to jump the curve with you.

We need to be able, in this environment, to maintain our connection to divine intelligence and to resonate with all living things. When you're not in prayer, hug a tree. Really, take your shoes off, put your feet on the ground, and talk to a cow. It does marvelous things for me.

Our situation reminds me very much of a quote from an Australian Aboriginal woman. Australia is on my mind because we are working on our fabulous trip to Uluru in May of 2018 with Richard Dolan and Jason Bawden-Smith. We recently produced an incredible brochure. It's on the website, and you can check it out if you are interested.

I keep seeing pictures of Uluru, and she is on my mind. There is a greeting from her, the Australian Aboriginal woman, who I have always loved, “If you are coming to help me, you are wasting your time, but if you’ve come because your liberation is bound up with mine, then let us work together.”

Ladies and gentlemen, thank you for joining me for the 3rd Quarter Wrap Up. I hope you enjoyed News Trends & Stories and our Equity Overview with a great Rambus Chartology, and now Control 101. If you go to our web presentation, we will have a written description of Control 101, which includes the stories I have referred to in this presentation. We pulled from ‘Let’s Go to the Movies’ some great selections from movies that really inform the control system, in a special Control 101: Let’s Go to the Movies.

I was talking with Jason Werth, who is a wonderful author that wrote book reviews for us, approximately six weeks ago. I told him about struggling with describing the basic overview of Control Systems, so he decided to send me his musings on Control 101. He sent an absolutely fantastic piece. I called him and said, “Jason, can we publish this?” He responded in the affirmative, so we will have that on as well.

So, on Control 101, we will have ‘Control 101: Let’s Go to the Movies’, and Jason Werth’s musings, as well as a list of Solari Report Resources. Of course, it all dovetails with great conversations with Dr. Farrell on News Trends & Stories and talking about the importance of enforcing the Constitution and enforcing the law.

Once again, thank you for joining me on the 3rd Quarter Wrap Up. Next quarter will be our Annual Wrap Up. It's a very big deal here at The Solari Report. We're going to be looking at the pension funds system, which is a major topic. In 2016, when I interviewed Don Cox, he said that after the election the number one issue was going to be that the pension funds don't have the money to meet their obligations. My plan for the 1st Quarter Wrap Up 2018 is 'Space-Based Economy', so there is much to look forward to.

Even though we've finished our writings and recordings for the 3rd Quarter Wrap Up on Control 101, expect the conversation on control technologies to continue. As I said, we're going to have Melissa and Aaron Dykes next week talking about the war for your mind. They've been doing great work and I've been publishing their videos. I recommend Truthstream Media to you. They have a real focus on this topic, and are working on a documentary, which I'm hoping will be out and available soon. We all need it.

At the same time, I expect plenty of feedback from you such as: "You forgot this control system. What about this control system?" I see this as something our network is going to be working on to help each other get more and more knowledgeable about a free life.

Please post your thoughts that you have on how we can make this knowledge and information better and more useful for you because the result that we are looking for is that you have a free and inspired life.

Thank you for joining me on The Solari Report and have a wonderful evening.
