Solari Report Update

Political Control & Pedophilia with Jon Rappoport - February 09th

To

“You are the bows from which your children
as living arrows are sent forth.
The archer sees the mark upon the path of the infinite, and He bends you with His might that His arrows may go swift and far.
Let your bending in the archer’s hand be for gladness;
For even as He loves the arrow that flies,
so He loves also the bow that is stable.”
~ Kahlil Gibran, “On Children”

This week Jon Rappoport of No More Fake News will join me on the Solari Report to discuss the historical relationship between political control and pedophilia.

Arrests of pedophilia and pornography rings continue in the United State and Europe. Allegations swirl as a result of WikiLeaks disclosures. Congressman and media newscasters behave in a bizarre manner that suggest the possibility of blackmail. Putin refers twice to pedophilia in his discussion of Western corruption in his recent Christmas address.

All of these seemingly disparate events indicate that the chances of a major pedophilia scandal in 2017 are growing. Just in case, I want you briefed with knowledge of the history and tradition involved. I also want you to think through how this knowledge and greater transparency in the media may impact your family. I want you to have some time to consider the practical implications to yourself and yours.

In Let’s Go to the Movies, I will review The Finders from Tracy Lucca Petrongolo of Lucca Films. Tracy has given the Solari Report permission to publish her powerful movie based on the true story of a US child trafficking network. Here is the description from Lucca Films:

“The beloved mayor of a small town is running for Congress, but just before the election, her son is almost kidnapped. As she begins to unravel the case, she finds the very institutions that she thought were there to help and protect her are now out to get her. When she doesn’t back down, the powers that be are forced to offer her a deal. Will she sell her soul to the devil?”

This is the first movie that has used the Solari Report as a critical element in the story line. In a scene from the movie, the mayor listens to our Solari Report interview with Nick Bryant on his investigation of The Franklin Scandal and Cover Up while jogging through the town for her exercise.

In Money & Markets this week I will discuss the latest in financial and geopolitical news. I will connect the dots between our interview and the recent US ban on immigration from targeted countries.

After a country is targeted by war and/or disaster capitalism, the natural resources are harvested and the population is culled – from the best and brightest going to Silicon Valley, Hollywood and Wall Street to orphans of the poor trafficked to pedophilia networks. Refuges are placed strategically around the United States to help engineer the economy and electoral college – all at taxpayer expense.

One commentator last week pointed out that for the cost of settling 10,000 Syrian refugees in the United States, we could settle 122,000 in the Middle East. The problem is that would put the culling machine out of business – that is why they are screaming loud and clear. That includes all the grant recipients and “do-gooders” who make money helping the culling machine go.

The system works because no one is required to look at it on an integrated basis. If the Trump Administration forces transparency, Americans will have to reckon with our economic model. Can we be financially successful by making America great or do we need to keep making war on others for their natural and human resources?

Food: On or Off the Radar Screen?

We all have a personal, intimate connection with food. We shop, we cook, some of us garden, and we all eat. We share this personal, intimate connection with every human being and all the animals on Planet Earth. We have access to food and water or we die. This creates what economists call an inelastic demand. In one sense, our demand for food and water is like our demand for oxygen. Our living systems demand food to survive and thrive.

The importance of food can be seen in many different ways. A great deal of valuable land is dedicated to providing us with crops. A population of over 26 billion animals is being tended to provide us with meat. The oceans are continually harvested to provide us with fish. In most areas of the world, grocery stores and restaurants abound. Our daily lives dedicate a significant amount of time to accessing, preparing, eating and digesting food.

But for many of us, food is not really on the radar screen. We have come to take the availability of food for granted.

Workforce

Prior to the industrial revolution, the majority of people on earth worked in agriculture and farming. In today’s world, a much higher percentage of the population is urbanized and a smaller number of people are involved in growing or raising food. The percentage of the population in the G-7 nations working in agriculture ranges from 0.7% in the United States to 3.9% in Italy. In the emerging markets, this percentage is much higher:

- Mexico: 13.4%
- China: 33.6%
- India: 49%

If you live in the developed world, it is likely that you know more doctors, software developers, lawyers, electricians, plumbers or government officials than farmers.

This week on the Solari Report, Saker joins me for his quarterly report on the emerging multipolar world. We will focus on the recent meltdown in Washington over the changes underway in the United States policies regarding Russia. I will also compliment Saker for his accurate prediction last October about the schism inside the US deep state and the implications for the Presidential election.

Who and what will determine US policy to Russia and China? Who are the players involved? What does it mean for our relationships with the Anglo-American alliance and Europe? What does it mean for the future of NATO? Geopolitical alignments and trade relationships have never been so fluid, which is why I am delighted that Saker will be joining me this Thursday.

We will also discuss his latest article, “A color revolution is under way in the United States.”

Please note that one of the two key variables that drive our scenarios for 2017 was the shift to the multipolar world. See the 2016 Annual Wrap Up published this month. Also in the Annual Wrap Up – The Essential Saker: From the Trenches of the Emerging Multipolar World has been named one of our Best Books for 2017.
